BeeCut has been discontinued and is no longer supported. See this thread BeeCut was discontinued because it is no longer used anywhere and is no longer free. I started working on a new application, VA-Cinema. I'll be doing another newsletter as soon as it is done to make you aware of it. Thanks for your understanding! The overall goal of this proposal is to understand why serotonergic (5-HT) neurons have a high firing rate and why serotonergic (5-HT) axons can only induce transient or long-lasting inhibition, or not at all, of neighboring neurons. A better understanding of the function of 5-HT-cells will provide insight into their role in human disorders. In the last decade we have developed a well-validated in vitro preparation of the dorsal raphe nucleus that allows us to study serotonergic (5-HT) axons at the synaptic, ionic, and cellular levels. The following aims will elucidate 1) the relationship between the 5-HT-release rate and the firing rate of neighboring 5-HT-cells and 2) the mechanism of the short-lasting inhibition and long-lasting facilitation of neighboring neurons by 5-HT-axons. I. The release of 5-HT can be blocked by the activation of 5-HT2 or 5-HT3 receptors on the 5-HT-cell. The strength of the inhibition can be modulated by the activation of 5-HT1A autoreceptors on the axon, which activate a K+ current. A combinative blockade of 5-HT2 and 5-HT3 receptors eliminates the short-lasting inhibition. Aim 2. The inhibition of neighboring cells can be enhanced or suppressed by a mechanism independent of the release of 5-HT. Facilitation requires a Ca2+ increase and an increase in the intracellular pH. Inhibition is the result of an increase in a slow K+-current. The short-lasting inhibition is abolished, while long-lasting 3da54e8ca3
