The P-40 series were a series of two-seat single engine biplane fighter aircraft that served with the United States Army Air Corps, Navy, Marine Corps, and in the China Air Force during the 1930s. The series featured a choice of two engines. The P-40N was a variant with a radial engine while the prototype P-40Ns had inline engines. In the USA, the P-40 series was designated to be one of the high performance fighters before the introduction of the more advanced P-51 Mustang. P-40N The P-40N is a variant of the P-40B with a more powerful engine and the addition of two rocket launch tubes under the wings. The difference in the aircraft is clearly visible, from the new position of the pilot, behind the main wings. The navigation lights in the nose had a slightly larger size. The heavy specification engine and the added power make the P-40N highly maneuverable, one of the fastest biplane fighters of its time. However, the five-gun P-40N also had some flaws which led to fatal accidents and forced the United States Army Air Corps to design an improved version of the aircraft. P-40N An improved P-40E variant was developed, equipped with a Pratt & Whitney R-2800-100 radial engine, this time with a much narrower cowling. The new engine block had two additional cooling fans added, giving the engine a much larger cooling surface area. The nose of the aircraft was greatly simplified, but instead, a Hispano-Suiza 12Y engine with a diameter cylinder was used. A new P-40E model was put into production during the summer of 1941. The P-40Es were slower than the P-40Ns and were largely built during the second wave of P-40 production. They were produced as a response to the Allied fighters which succeeded the P-40B as front-line fighters after the Japanese withdrew from the Battle of Midway. P-40N The USAAF later ordered more P-40Ns and replaced the obsolescent R-2800-65 with the more powerful R-2800-75. Some of the P-40Ns still in service with the USAF in 1955 had their R-2800s replaced with Wasp Junior II-300 inline engines, while the rest went back to the R-2800-100s. This contains locomotives from: Can I change the colour of the engine cab in this add-on? If so, how?A: No, there is no way to change the engine cab colour manually in the add-on. However, in the GMT version, there are engine cab colours. You can see them all in the GMT loco section of the game. You can also see an older table here.Instructions on how to change the engine cab colour. Q: I've heard that there are no other UK locos in this add-on. Is this true?A: Not all the locos that are in the add-on are in the GMT, and they are all available in the GMT, however in my opinion the order in which they come into the game is not accurate. One I think that is easiest to use is: 74016, 74020, 74459, 74510, 74799, 74860, 74934, 74967, 75022, 75026, 75098, 75130, 75160, 75299A, 76045, 76157, 76123, 76151, 76319, 76360, 76634, 76696, 76895, 76900, 76927, 76965, 76984, 77019, 77148, 77176, 77334, 77372, 77399, 77405
