Safety of hip fracture surgery in patients with symptomatic multiple myeloma. Concern has been raised about the safety of performing hip fracture surgery in patients with multiple myeloma. We investigated the risk of major surgical complications in these patients. This was a retrospective cohort study of patients with multiple myeloma who underwent hip fracture surgery. Data were obtained from multiple prospectively collected databases, including the National Surgical Quality Improvement Program, the American College of Surgeons National Surgical Quality Improvement Program database, and an academic tertiary-care hospital registry. Major complications were defined as myocardial infarction, cardiopulmonary arrest, death during or within 30 days of surgery, and unplanned admission to the intensive care unit. A total of 36,104 hip fracture surgeries were identified in patients with multiple myeloma. Major complications occurred in 663 (1.9%) cases, including 261 patients (7.6%) who had myocardial infarction. Cardiopulmonary arrest occurred in 249 (7.3%) patients, and death occurred in 204 (5.8%) patients. There were no unplanned intensive care unit admissions after hip fracture surgery. In patients with multiple myeloma undergoing hip fracture surgery, major surgical complications are uncommon and are associated with a low incidence of unplanned intensive care unit admission.
