Hypothermia is a potentially life-threatening condition that may occur during prolonged exposure to a cold environment. The aim of this study was to elucidate the effects of caffeine and indomethacin on the perception of skin temperature during prolonged cold exposure. The subjects were eight male college students (age: 20-25 years). They were exposed to a cold chamber (15 degrees C) for 2 h with and without caffeine (5 mg/kg) and indomethacin (100 mg) ingestion. During the cold exposure, subjects were asked to rate their sense of coldness on a 100 mm visual analog scale using the method of limits. There were no significant differences among the three conditions, but caffeine (7.27 +/- 1.33 degrees C) caused a significant increase in the perception of skin temperature. Indomethacin administration (5.74 +/- 1.26 degrees C) had no effect on the perception of skin temperature. Caffeine attenuates the perception of skin temperature during prolonged cold exposure, possibly as a result of an increase in metabolic heat production.Q: MySQL query results modification My query SELECT * FROM servers WHERE servers.market = 5 ORDER BY servers.rank DESC, servers.last_update LIMIT 0,2 return the following records: +-----+ | servers.id | servers.market | servers.rank | +-----+ | 2 | 5 |
